

SENATE PASSES BILL 73 TO 27

(Since the final vote on passage of the Civil Rights Bill came too late for inclusion in our MEMO we include it below as a supplement. We also reprint, from the "Bipartisan Civil Rights Newsletter," the bulletin distributed daily by the Senate leadership to keep Senators and staff informed of the bill's progress, a brief recapitulation of how the debate went during the past three months.

With that final word, the Bipartisan Newsletter announced it was "joining the legions of other small rural dailies" and going out of business.)

How the Senate Voted on Civil Rights in 1964

This supplement indicates how our Senators acted on HR 7152 roll call votes. Included in the 114 roll call votes under consideration here are those to take up the bill, to keep it out of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and to invoke cloture, as well as the votes on amendments. Not included is the final vote for passage. We consider all amendments (except, of course, the leadership substitute) weakening amendments and votes against them are recorded as votes for civil rights.

KEY: + means a correct vote
- means an incorrect vote

Recapitulation

(Reprinted from the "Bipartisan Civil Rights Newsletter.")

The Senate formally took up H. R. 7152 on March 30, after having debated civil rights for 17 days. The first successful cloture vote (71-29) on a civil rights bill occurred on June 10--534 hours, one minute and 57 seconds of debate after the bill was taken up. During this time, Senators offered well over 500 amendments. Of this number, the Senate considered 118 in seven days of debate after cloture. Twelve amendments were accepted, including the Dirksen-Mansfield-Kuchel-Humphrey substitute.

Comprehensive summaries of the bill, as amended by the Dirksen-Mansfield-Kuchel-Humphrey substitute (not including the language of the Morton jury trial amendment), can be found in the remarks of Senator Dirksen (June 5, pp. 12381-12385) and of Senator Humphrey (June 4, pp. 12283-12289) in the Record. The Morton jury trial provision appears on p. 13744 (June 17). Complete explanations of the Senate-passed bill will be available in a few days.

Oratory and rhetoric will be found in the Record in sufficient quantity to please nearly anyone. Suffice it to say here that the job was done. We have a good bill. We still have a Senate, and we have miles to go before we sleep, and miles to go before we sleep.
