COURTLAND VERNON COX

advised on December 7, 1972, that Courtland Cox attended a meeting of the African Liberation Support Committee (ALSC), held at Panneker Recreation Center, 2500 Georgia Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. (WDC).

The African Liberation Day Coordinating Committee (ALDCC) described itself in a printed leaflet distributed during May, 1972, as an ad hoc coalition of black public figures who have come together despite their political and ideological differences, for the sole purpose of mobilizing blacks in the United States, Canada, and the Caribbean to demonstrate their political solidarity with the liberation movements on the African Continent.

The ALDCC called for a demonstration on May 27, 1972, which resulted in a protest demonstration of approximately 10,000 individuals in WDC.

The ALSC was formerly known as the ALDCC and was formed to show continuous support for liberation movements on the African Continent and plan for an ALDD in 1973.

, advised on December 11, 1972, that Courtland Cox attended an open house on December 9, 1972, held to celebrate the relocation of the Center for Black Education from its old location, 1435-37 Fairmont Street, N.W., WDC, to its new location, 1611 Kilbourne Street, N.W., WDC.
