Aren't the paddy waroo spoke May 18 at the funeral of Benjamin, a group leader for the Delta Ministry in Jackson. Jackson must immediately open an investigation into the death of Medgar Evers, the NAACP's director of field work for Mississippi and Alabama. There were some white students from Brown University in the town. The funeral, however, was not held in the city, but in the suburbs. The community was shocked to learn of the death of Medgar Evers. Brown had worked as a writer before his death. Rap Brown said that he didn't want to say anything about Evers. But Brownlee said, "I don't think it's appropriate to discuss the death of Medgar Evers here today." Brownlee continued, "We are here to discuss the future of our community." He said that the community must work together to ensure that such a tragedy never happens again.

A new hope for the future...the new generation...is the theme of the annual Peace Corps meeting, and the word has spread. The Peace Corps is 15 years old; it has sent nearly 40,000 volunteers to more than 100 countries around the world. The Peace Corps is looking for new recruits to continue its mission of promoting peace and understanding between nations.

The Peace Corps was established in 1961 by President John F. Kennedy as a response to the Cold War. Its purpose was to send American volunteers to developing countries around the world to help with education, health, and economic development projects. Today, the Peace Corps is still going strong, and its impact on the world is greater than ever.

Over the years, the Peace Corps has sent volunteers to more than 100 countries, and has helped millions of people around the world. The Peace Corps has helped to build schools, clinics, and roads; it has helped to teach English and math; it has helped to promote women's rights and democracy. The Peace Corps is a truly remarkable organization, and it is worth supporting in every way possible.

If you are interested in learning more about the Peace Corps, or in volunteering yourself, please visit their website at www.peacecorps.gov. You can find information about current volunteer opportunities, as well as information about the history and mission of the Peace Corps. Thank you for your support of this important organization.

PPC Runs Independent Co-ops

New Jobs for Poor People in Mississippi

BY CARL TALE

JACKSON, Miss.—Every other Tuesday morning Doug Jenkins leaves Jackson with ten or 15 burlap sacks full of cloth, hundreds of yards of cloth, several big cakes of clear wax, and supplies of felt, suede, glue, thread, and yarn.

When he returns, late at night, these things are gone. In their place, he has hundreds of stuffed animals, a menagerie of doll clothes, and a manager from a stuffed lions, owls, and rabbits.

Jenkins works for the Pointeaux Cooperative (PPC) Tuesday to Friday, as he delivers supplies to the PPC co-op in Clarks and Marion counties, and in so doing, he makes sure that the people have what they need for the next two weeks. On other days of the week, he visits the six other PPC cooperatives operating around Mississippi and brings back goods; he repairs, toils, and produces, covering cotton, whiskey, and soap, among other things.

Jenkins has been in the business of selling goods to poor people for about 20 years. He went into business for himself after he finished the University of Mississippi. He has helped start co-ops all over Mississippi who can't earn their daily bread.

Jenkins is a SNCC worker. The SNCC (Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee) worked on civil rights activity. John Brown, now president of the Community Co-op, used to work for the SNCC.

Jenkins quit the SNCC when the co-ops got on the right track, and he returned, late at night, all these co-ops until he returned to the co-op, with a car full of cloth, and a man full of goods.

The co-ops are all different because they are owned and operated by the members in each community. They set their own rules and manage their own affairs.

At PPC, for example, the members decide how they want to run their co-op and how they want to manage their own affairs. They work and hire their own workers. They get a half-hour's pay determined by their checking account.

Jenkins told the story of a woman who was told by her co-op that she was not working enough hours. They told her that she had to work two more hours, or she would lose her job. She worked the extra hours, and the co-op decided that she was working enough hours.

At PPC, the members are told that they must earn $1.25 an hour to keep their job. They must earn enough money to keep their job. No co-op has made a profit without the members' work.

The members of PPC have to work at least 10 hours per week, and they have to work for at least 10 hours per week. They have to work for at least 10 hours per week, and they have to work for at least 10 hours per week.

These Girls Play Rough!

By Michael S. Lottman

Montgomery—You may not believe it, but the Montgomery High School's baseball team is doing pretty well.

The girls have scored four runs in each of the last three games, and they're hitting .250. And the team is now 3-3. The girls are playing very well, and they're winning.

The team's highest scorer is Miss Comanche Taylor, who hit two home runs in a recent game. She's also a good pitcher, and she's been named the team's most valuable player.

The coach, Miss Lorraine Jackson, says the girls are working hard and they're getting better every day.

The girls are making a name for themselves, and they're doing it the right way. They're playing baseball, and they're winning. The girls are proving that girls can play baseball too.
