JULIAN'S CAMPAIGN

(My thinking...)

I approached the campaign with some misgivings and ambivalence based on a serious question I had about anyone being able to function effectively in the state legislature without the support of the "establishment". I will confess that I was also worried about the corrupting influence of politics in general. I felt, and I still feel, the threat that American "politics" has on people who "play the game"—you know, like touch (politics) and be tainted.

On the other hand, I felt that Julian on the floor of the Georgia State Legislature would, by virtue of the fact that he was a young, black Snick worker, inherently focus attention on the politics that he articulated. In Julian's politics, I have faith, so in the end, I based my decision to work on knowing Julian.

Most people on staff say the cities are hardest to organize. They tend to be "too apathetic". We don't know yet what can top and sustain the energies of the people locked up in the city ghettos.

What is clearest to me in the cities, is that the politics that runs things is out of the hands (read in control) of the people who need to use it most. (People can enter into politics, e.g. VR and voting, but they can't control it.)

Julian's campaign then, was a chance for me (personal interest) to explore the possibilities of people being able to use the politics that exist. Within the confines of today's "political realities", I don't think we've (SNCC) ever had such a real opportunity before.

It was good for me to get into the routine of canvassing again (not done since Mississippi summer project). Just knocking on doors and talking very specifically about a community, its problems and some of the things that might be done about them. That was good.

WE FOUND

We often remarked during the campaign, that if you went off Hunter Street, you would never know there was a campaign going on. So true! Politicians simply don't approach people in any real sense with their politics. (Politically, that is not realistic.) Our approach was exactly different. We wanted people to use their own politics. We had a tool for them to use—Julian.

Like most communities, the 136th District has been ripped and torn apart. Julian was/ is like a sewing needle. Using him, we hoped the District could begin to sew itself together again. Probably other kinds of needles are needed. But this beginning was worth indicating.

State Legislatures are a mystery. What we know about them generally, is that a group of people sit up there and do something or other—that is called politics. Which is, in reality, outside of the day to day concerns of the majority of people since they don't understand it. It is important to understand that, during the campaign, Julian was SEEN and KNOWN. And then, the mysterious political aura that around at least one state legislator to be. People voted for someone they knew and felt comfortable with. Very important; a politician... who took the time to walk streets, knock on doors and know people, a politician who was not threatened by a constituency that was organized around issues and not the politician. An operating philosophy of ours was that if hard work can win a campaign, then we sure as Hell intended to win.

I think that literally 100% of the people I canvassed had never had anyone come to their house, sit down and seriously talk to them about their community. Certainly not a political campaign worker or candidate, suggesting that a community had to act as a community if they wanted to talk about and make relevant politics. Imagine a politician suggesting that he wasn't the most relevant thing in politics! Imagine that politician winning! Think if that can be sustained and extended.

SNICK FLAK

Most of the time, while working on the campaign, we were wearing shirts (ironed), ties, and slacks. Every now and then, a suit. This, apparently, is not respectable by some Snick standards. Several Snick fold make judgments about the campaign based on our appearance. We were wearing ties; therefore, we must have "sold-out" to play the political game. (Or we were playing the political game; therefore, we must have sold-out to wear ties.)

The usual articulation was that, these people in the 136th District, are not free. They are all bound up in the orientation to material and surface incelevancies. You campaign workers are perpetuating that by wearing ties and things (symbol of the decadent middle class value). I agree only that the ties and things are irrelevant to me. But I am conscious of the fact that it is not entirely irrelevant to a lot of people. My judgment was that by adopting the standard of neatness helped not raise the irrelevant question of dress at all among the people we were working with and helped gain us immediate focus on non-relevant issues. It is said that some SNCC people judged the campaign by making the same kinds of surface assumptions which focus on the externeous and irrelevant, that we are allegedly freedom fighting against in society.

I think that what a lot of people in the Atlanta office men when they say that they "want to go out to the field" is that they want to participate in or be on the same or some big action and not so much the day to day grubby work.

THE CAMPAIGN POLITICS

We were taken very seriously. First in the neighborhoods, were like in the rural, people judged us by what they saw us doing in relation to what we said we hoped to do and see happen. We were honest and consistent. We got support from the neighborhoods. House meetings were held.

We did not need the Negro democratic machine in terms of the politics we were organizing, which was politics that did not belong to politicians for which meant that we were taken seriously by this machine because if we won, we couldn't be controlled by them which seriously threatens the operation of this machine. Especially, if what we do catches on and extends itself. Leroy Johnson (Negro State Senator) wants "politicians" that he can control and use for his political ends. (Anyway, we got invited to democratic luncheons and things -- I always left still hungry!)

Negro politics in Georgia is still new enough and open enough for Negroes to force a whole new concept of what politics is.
POLITICAL POTENTIAL

I want to repeat that last sentence: "Negro politics in Georgia is still new enough and open enough for Negroes to force a whole new concept of what politics is", not to mention other deep south states. Immediately after it became clear that Julian had won, I thought that we (SNCC) could have pulled off the same thing in all of the Districts where Negroes had won. There were districts in Georgia where nobody even bothered to qualify. I guess these seats are still open. What that could mean is that the issues and questions that are raised in communities as a result of our work, could be amplified the floor of the Georgia House booking communities together on common issues. Imagine, ten SNCC guys in the Georgia house committed to organizing their districts to using the seats in the House to meet community needs defined by the community.

I think what we will increasingly find, especially in the burban south, are chances to explore American politics and the ways it can be shaped (if it can at all) to meet our needs. This can mesh and hook up with the radical forms of our own (like FDP) that we are developing.

Admittedly, there are dangers inherent in this exploration. (e.g. pressure of traditional politics, isolation, the fact that some people will be corrupted). However, I am fascinated with the idea of communities moving in and out of traditional American political forms. It implies a creation of instability of these political forms, created by people whose needs are not being and probably will not be met by these forms anyway. I think it is to our advantage to have oppressive government unstable. They have to release some of their control to steady themselves, or they try and steady themselves by fighting control which heightens the potential for rebellion.

It is a fact now that Julian is the democratic nominee for the Georgia house from the 136th District. More than likely he will be elected on June 16th. I think that SNCC needs to commit itself to an all-out effort to get an overwhelming turnout for this election. For the one thing that characterizes all comment on this election is the expected poor turnout and interest.

We need to disprove "voter apathy" which really is election irrelevancy. The concept we need to focus attention on is that of people's right to shape and use politics. If that can happen in any one district in Georgia (or anywhere) it poses a threat to current politics all over. In effect, it means that our political campaign does not end in June 16th
